

4.7.4.1.1.3 Review of the Permit Application/Technical Review/ Permit Application for New Facilities/General Permits All Others

Applicability:

This section provides information about the technical review of applications for General Permits.

Content:

For general permits not otherwise mentioned in this section, all applications should be made on Form E. Because this form applies to many different types of permits, not all of the form must be completed for each type of permit. For example, most storm water facilities will not have an operator, and not all facilities will have a source of drinking water.

As with all permit applications, the permit writer must use best professional judgement to determine whether enough information has been received to draft and issue a permit to a certain facility in a certain area. If not, more information must be requested.

Some general permits contain exclusions for facilities located with certain types of receiving streams, or facilities of a certain size, or those with certain industrial activities. Such information is often not included with the Form E application. The permit writer must obtain this additional information to determine whether or not the general permit can be issued. This will include reviewing available GIS data, reviewing watersheds to make sure they are not upstream of an Outstanding State Resource Water, reviewing available water quality information, etc.

Other than the few general permits that require public notice, after reviewing the application, additional information, and compliance history, if the facility qualifies for the general permit then the permit is issued.

Please see 10 CSR 20-6.020(1)(C)2. for a list of general permit types which require public notice. The permit writer is also encouraged to review the templates for the general permit and related general permits to provide background information for issuing the permit to the facility or site.
