Keith, David, House
St. Louis County, Missouri
Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri

Summary: The David Keith house, at 116 North Woodlawn Avenue, is a two story Italianate style house with a symmetrical five bay facade and a one-story central bay front porch. Constructed ca. 1855, the highly intact house is an early example of Property Type B. Italianate Houses. It meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document "Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri." The box-shaped house has a front-facing centered gable which projects from a low-pitched hip roof with wide, overhanging eaves which feature paired brackets. The symmetrically arranged facade has a small, one-story central bay portico. Classically inspired elements include the porch columns, denticulated cornice, and pedimented window surrounds. Typical of the Kirkwood Italianate Houses property type is the wide, shiplap siding with wood quoins; this is one of the earliest houses to utilize that type of wall cladding. A three-car garage, constructed in 1953, is at the rear of the lot and is non-contributing. Additions to the rear of the house do not detract from its integrity of design, materials, workmanship, setting, and location.

Elaboration: The two-story house has a small, front-facing centered gable, which projects from the very low-pitched hipped roof. These roofs have wide overhanging eaves with a wide frieze board decorated with dentils. The eaves of the hip roof also have paired brackets and jig-sawn scrollwork beneath. As was typical of many of the extant Italianate homes in Kirkwood, the house is clad with wide, shiplap siding, accented with wood quoins, for an overall effect of tooled stone.

The house faces west to North Woodlawn street. The main section of the house is cubic, and the facade is five bays wide across the front. The centered front entry has a one-story, one-bay wide flat roofed porch. The porch has overhanging eaves, a wide entablature with dentils and decorative brackets, a pair of slender round columns, and two engaged columns. The capitals are Tuscan in derivation. The recessed front door has a rectangular single light transom. The trim around the doorway is like that of the windows, with a flat pedimented top and eared side boards.

The windows are two-over-two, double-hung wood sash. The elaborated surrounds have integral pedimented crowns and eared side trim. The attic window in the centered front gable pediment is fixed, with a round-arched top. There are two, flat-roofed, polygonal bays – one near the front of the south side wall, and another near the back of the north side wall. Both bays have the same type of wide, overhanging eaves, brackets, and dentils found on the front porch and main eaveline. The south elevation also features a centered, exterior fireplace.

Additions to the rear (east) of the main section of the house form an "L". These additions are one-story, flat-roofed, and have beveled siding on the north and south elevations. The walls facing into the "L" or to the rear have been clad with narrower, wood clapboards. A modern raised deck with brick foundation is set within the rear "L". The rear additions have been in place since before 1926; they show up on the Sanborn map of the house published then.

The front door opens to a relatively wide formal stair hall, which retains its early or original wood floors, plaster walls and long U-shaped staircase. (See photo 7.) The staircase features a large tapered turned newel post, with a balustrade of delicate spindles. Much of the original door and window trim is intact, and in very good condition. The trim around many of the interior openings is very like that found on the outside of the house, with simple pedimented lintels which overhang the side trim slightly, for an "eared" effect. (See photo 8.) There is also an interior entrance to the vaulted stone cellar; the cellar is reached via a trap door which blends into the early wood floor. (See photos 9 and 10.)

The lot is over a third of an acre, and has many mature deciduous shade trees which enframe the house. Small to medium size coniferous trees have been planted on the north side of the property, which includes paved drive leading to a non-contributing, three-car cinderblock garage at the rear. A curving concrete walkway leads from the driveway at the north side to the brick steps of the front porch. Foundation plantings include trimmed evergreen shrubs, deciduous shrubs, and perennial plants.

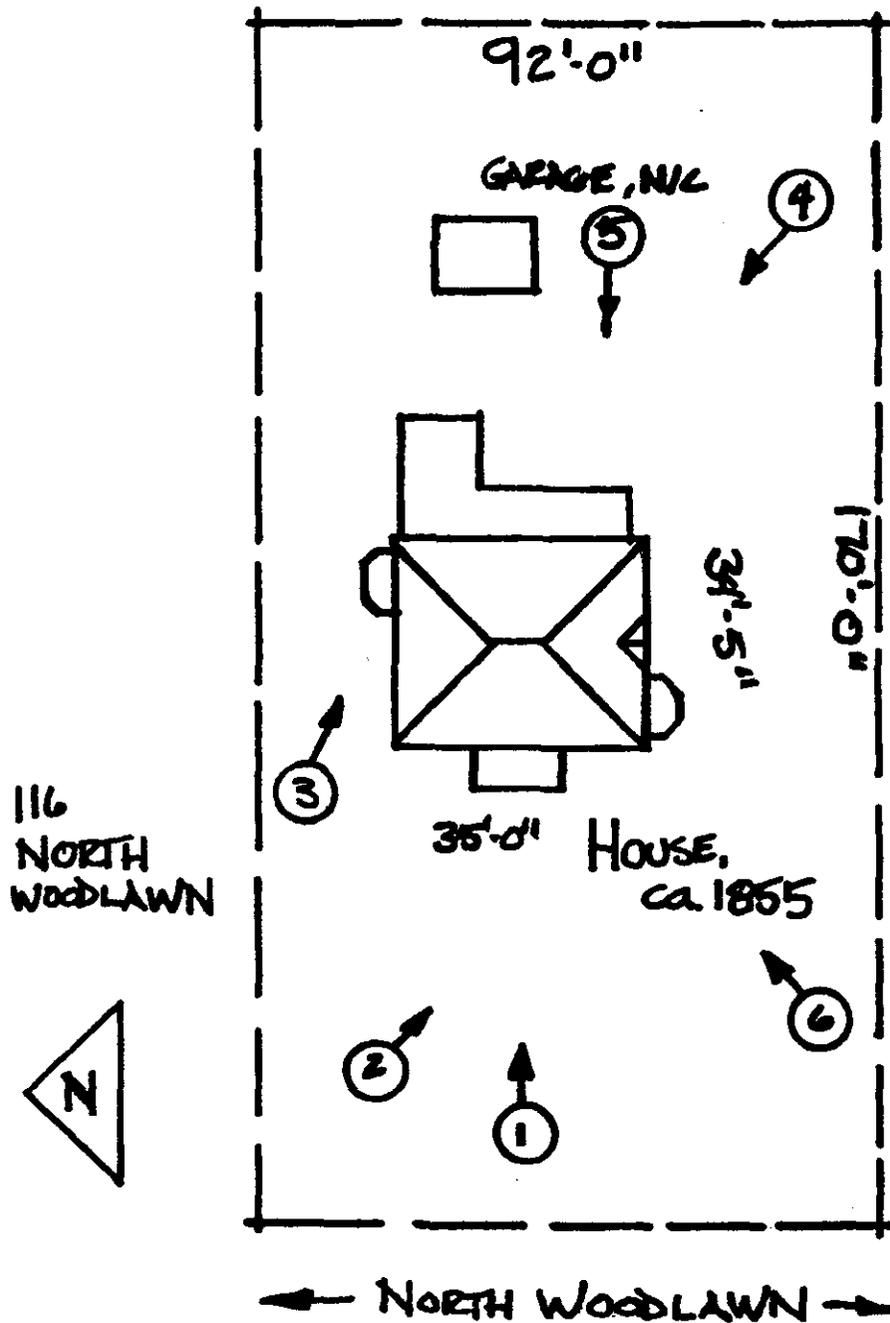

The Keith house is highly intact, and in excellent condition. It has seen no exterior alterations of note in over a century, and is immediately recognizable as one of the oldest houses in the core of Kirkwood today. △

Summary: The David Keith House, 116 N. Woodlawn, is significant under Criterion C in the area of ARCHITECTURE. Constructed just a few years after the town was platted, this is one of the earliest surviving examples of the Italianate style left in the historic core of Kirkwood, and one of the oldest houses of any type. Its low-pitch hip roof with widely overhanging eaves, cornice line brackets, denticulated frieze board, and wood siding with matching quoins which imitate stone are all typical of Property Type B.: Italianate Houses. The house meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document "Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri," and falls under the context "The Creation of Kirkwood, a Planned Railroad Suburb--1851-1864." Although this high-style house is clearly of the Italianate property type, it also has characteristics often identified with the Greek Revival style. Typically Greek Revival elements include a symmetrical facade and conservative cubic massing, as well as straight topped windows surrounded by pedimented and "eared" trim. The presence of such features is not surprising, as the Greek Revival style had been popular for decades at the time the house was built. The house was built ca. 1855 by or for David Keith, and the period of significance for the property corresponds to the construction date. The only other resource on the property is a modern three car garage, which is a non-contributing building. The house is in excellent condition, and exhibits a high degree of integrity of location, design, materials, workmanship, feeling and association.

Elaboration: The Keith house is a very early example of the Italianate House property type.¹ It was built at a time of transition between the Greek Revival and Italianate styles, a fact which is reflected by different stylistic elements of the house. The Greek Revival style had dominated American architecture for decades, while the Italianate was just coming into favor. As one national study of house styles noted, few pre-1855 examples of the Italianate style can be found.² The Keith house thus stands as a highly innovative house for its time. It seems likely that it was a trend-setter in the community, serving as a model for other property owners who were planning for houses in the new suburb. It is the oldest known resource to utilize the distinctive siding and quoin system which emulates stone work, and may have been the house to introduce such a treatment to local builders. Other Italianate features of note include the prominent bracketed cornice and polygonal windows bays, which enliven the otherwise cubic form.

The relatively early construction date of the Keith House is reflected by the presence of a few design features which are more typical of Greek Revival houses in Kirkwood than local Italianate examples. The facade of the house, for example exhibits a symmetrical Classicism which is more common to Greek Revival houses in the area than to Italianate dwellings. In Kirkwood, almost all Italianate houses have an irregular form and asymmetrical facade. The pedimented front cross gable and columned front porch are also features commonly found on Greek Revival houses, as is the pedimented and "eared" door and window trim found on both the interior and exterior of the house. It should be noted that many of those features can also be found on early Italianate houses in the community, and that overall, the style of the house is most accurately described as Italianate.

The house has been credited in local landmark files as having been built by or for David Keith in 1850.³ As that date precedes the creation of both Kirkwood and the street which this house faces, the construction date here has been set at ca. 1855, two years after streets were platted and lots in Kirkwood were first offered for sale. David Keith was known to have been living in the community around that time. He was especially active in the early development of the Presbyterian Church of Kirkwood. In 1857, the Kirkwood Association gave him and two other men a lot upon which the congregation soon after built their first church. He was still in the area and active in the church a decade later. He was one of eleven men who signed the articles of incorporation for the Presbyterian congregation in December of 1867, and he later helped convey the church lot to the newly incorporated church.⁴

A later owner of this land was Lizzie McLagan, who bought forty acres, including this house lot, in 1863.⁵ By 1878, the forty acres had been subdivided, with this house occupying about a quarter of the block.⁶ The house and land were owned by Nannie Q. Harris at that time. Nannie Harris was the wife of Nicholas C. Harris, a plug tobacco manufacturer with his own company, N.C. Harris and Company, who was residing in St. Louis in 1875.⁷ It does not appear that the Harris family ever lived full time in Kirkwood, however. One history of St. Louis which was written in 1909 noted that N. C. Harris had built a house in the city, and that "Mrs. (Nannie) Harris still occupies her home on Westminster Place."⁸ The Kirkwood house may have been a country retreat, or simply an investment for the Harrises.

St. Louis County deed records show that John A. and Fannie McElroy owned the property in the 1880s, and sold it to Anna M. Hallstrom in 1893. Sarah and Joseph B. Greensfelder bought the property in 1907. Joseph Greensfelder was a well-known justice of the peace in nearby Clayton, who was known as the "marrying justice."⁹ He also helped found the Kirkwood Savings Bank, and served as its first president. Locally, the house is known as the Keith-Greensfelder House.

The Keith House continues in its original single family function, and it exhibits a very high level of integrity and craftsmanship. It is an important early high-style house, and one of the oldest in the community today. ⬆
