National Register of Historic Places
Registration Form

This form is for use in nominating or requesting determinations for individual properties and districts. See instructions in How to Complete the National Register of Historic Places Registration Form (National Register Bulletin 16A). Complete each item by marking "x" in the appropriate box or by entering the information requested. If an item does not apply to the property being documented, enter "N/A" for "not applicable." For functions, architectural classification, materials, and areas of significance, enter only categories and subcategories from the instructions. Place additional entries and narrative items on continuation sheets (NPS Form 10-900a). Use a typewriter, word processor, or computer, to complete all items.

Working-Class and Middle-Income Apartment Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri (MPS)

SUMMARY DESCRIPTION STATEMENT

The Gillham Court Apartments Building, located at 3411 Gillham Road near the intersection with Armour Boulevard, located in Kansas City's Mid-Town area, is a three-story building classified as a Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building property type as established in the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Working-Class and Middle-Income Apartment Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri." Completed in 1925, the building displays modest decorative embellishment typical of its property type, which includes a tall decorative wood cornice with paired brackets and extensive tapestry brickwork executed through cast stone squares set within the façade and bands of slightly projecting brick. The brick building, with its long, narrow rectangular footprint has the typical size, scale, and massing of an urban Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building designed to fit the narrow lots found in the City's older neighborhoods. It has a flat roof and a prominent one-story front porch across the full-width of the symmetrically arranged primary façade. The center bay entrance features sidelights and a transom window and leads directly into the hallway and staircase; typical of this property type, it lacks a formal entrance lobby. The internal plan incorporates a double-loaded central corridor on each floor flanked by eight small, self-sufficient studio efficiency¹ and one-bedroom apartment units. Open interior staircases on the west (front) and east (rear) ends of the building allow access between floors and the basement.

The Gillham Court Apartments Building retains the historic character of its functional property type, which is defined by its size, modest decorative embellishment, high number of small efficiency and one-bedroom apartments, and lack of a formal entrance lobby. Each hallway retains the original double-loaded corridors, wood floors, rhythm of unit door openings, and staircases at each end. The individual efficiency and one-bedroom units retain their small original spaces, wood floors, and window trim. Deterioration of the original six-over-one light wood sash windows led to their replacement in the 1980s with the existing one-over-one light vinyl sash units. The Gillham Court Apartments Building is one of two remaining of an original set of three located in the vicinity; the loss of its twin directly to the south affects the integrity of setting, but does not compromise the overall ability of this building to convey its historic associations since the building was historically designed and erected as both an individual apartment building and as part of a grouping of buildings of like design. Overall, the building retains all of its significant character-defining design elements and materials and clearly conveys its original role and historic associations as an apartment building designed for working-class wage earners. Its design and stylistic treatment successfully conveys feelings of its period of construction.

ELABORATION

LOCATION AND SETTING

The Gillham Court Apartments Building is located on the east side of Gillham Road, just north of the intersection of Gillham Road and Armour Boulevard, in the midst of a residential neighborhood characterized by multi-family dwellings and a lesser number of single-family residences dating from the early twentieth century. It is adjacent to the large early twentieth century apartment buildings that line Armour Boulevard. Gillham Road is a busy four-lane paved roadway with steep concrete curbs and broad concrete sidewalks and is a component of Kansas City's historic parks and boulevards system.

The building occupies nearly all of a long, narrow 50-by-115-foot lot, which is oriented east-west. The primary façade faces west onto Gillham Road and is sited at the sidewalk with a very shallow (2 foot) set back. A set of three non-original concrete steps leads from the sidewalk to the south end of the porch for entrance into the building. The building is flanked on each side by vacant lots, one of which is paved. The building stands approximately 200 feet north of the north boundary of the National Register-listed Armour Boulevard Multiple Resource Area Historic District II.

Exterior

The Gillham Court Apartments Building is a three-story brick building with a long rectangular footprint and a flat roof. The exterior walls are comprised of a variety of similar shades of reddish-orange grooved brick laid in a common bond. The rough-cut limestone foundation is exposed on the side elevations and covered by brick and cast stone on the primary façade.

The west (primary) façade has three bays and the side (north and south) elevations each have fourteen bays. Fenestration defines the bays, which are symmetrically arranged on each elevation. The window openings of the west (primary) façade contain bands of three one-over-one light sash windows in the outer bays and paired one-over-one light sash windows in the center bay where they retain the original six-light wood transom sashes. The west (primary) façade windows have cast stone sills; the side (north and south) elevation window openings have header brick sills.

A one-story porch with a flat roof spans the full-width of the west (primary) façade. The porch features a solid brick balustrade wall and square brick support posts. The porch roof structure is wood and features dentilation under the broad eaves. The soffits have very shallow peaks between each of the support posts. Bead board panels form the porch ceiling. The porch floor is non-original concrete. The primary entrance occupies the center bay and has a non-historic door set within the original opening that features three-quarter-height sidelights and the original sixteen-light wood transom sash.

Contrasting cast stone blocks set within the west (primary) façade wall provide a tapestry brick decorative treatment throughout the west (primary) façade and on the first bays of the north and south (side) elevations. Courses of slightly projecting header and soldier brick enframe the openings in these areas, featuring cast stone blocks at their intersections that further underscore the tapestry effect. Additional cast stone elements include the porch's perimeter balustrade wall railing capstones and the porch post caps.

A wood cornice structure incorporated into the parapet walls spans the full-width of the west (primary) façade and the first bays of the north and south (side) elevations. The cornice has a wide eaves overhang with paired decorative wood brackets aligned to further define the façade bays.

Interior

The Gillham Court Apartments Building contains approximately 22,500 square feet of space that includes a full basement and three floors of residential apartments. Each residential floor has an identical plan with a central double-loaded corridor flanked on each side by four small apartments. Open wood staircases at each end of these corridors allow vertical circulation. The main entrance leads directly into the west end of the first floor corridor. This de-facto entrance foyer has a bank of aluminum mailboxes set within a wood frame and a modest chair rail trim below that is composed of non-historic Lincrusta panels that form a faux wainscoting. The basement is unfinished and functions as storage and mechanical space.

The west (front) staircase is distinctly more decorative than the east (rear) staircase and features a modestly decorative newel post, a shaped wood handrail, and turned post balusters. The east (rear) staircase elements include a plain square newel post, handrail, and balusters. The corridors retain the historic wood floors and plaster wall finish, as well as the original unit door openings. Throughout the building, the residential units have a small four-room plan that includes a living/sleeping area (17 feet by 22 feet); a dining area (13 feet by 13 feet); a narrow galley kitchen (7.5 feet by 22 feet); and a full bath (7.5 feet by 9 feet). Some units retain French doors enclosing a broad closet that appears to have contained a Murphy bed.

INTEGRITY ASSESSMENT

The Gillham Court Apartments Building meets the integrity criteria for Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Buildings established in Section F of the Multiple Property Documentation Form "Working-Class and Middle-Income Apartment Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri" and is a very good example of an early twentieth century apartment building, which is an increasingly rare property type in Kansas City. Its historic identity is clearly conveyed through its retention of character-defining features, including its size, scale, and massing, as well as its original location, design, and workmanship. As noted, the demolition on the adjacent lots impacts the immediate setting. However, the presence of an unbroken streetscape of contemporaneous historic apartment buildings, both across the street to the west and facing onto East Armour Boulevard, all of which are listed in the National Register of Historic Places and/or the Kansas City Register of Historic Places, provides integrity of the larger streetscape and setting. The replacement of original window sashes affects the building's integrity of materials. However, the unaltered brick walls and porch and the retention of original decorative wood transoms and sidelights on the narrow west (primary) façade mitigate this loss. The building continues to clearly convey its historic feelings and associations with the development of working-class housing during the early twentieth century in Kansas City, Missouri.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Gillham Court Apartments Building located at 3411 Gillham Road in Kansas City, Jackson County, Missouri is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for the area of COMMUNITY PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT and under Criterion C for the area of ARCHITECTURE as documented in the Multiple Property Documentation Form (MPDF) “Working-Class and Middle-Income Apartment Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri.” The building has direct associations with the historic contexts developed as part of the MPDF including: “Residential Development Patterns: 1830-1964,” “The Evolution of the Working- and Middle-Class Multi-Family Purpose-Built Apartment Building in Kansas City: 1885-1964,” and “Architecture of Working- and Middle-Class Apartment Buildings: 1885-1964.”² The property meets the MPDF registration requirements. The period of significance for the Gillham Court Apartments Building is 1924 to 1925, the time during which the building was constructed. It is an excellent example of the Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building property type and meets the integrity thresholds established in Section F of the MPDF. The building is locally significant in the area of Community Planning and Development for its associations with the evolution of residential buildings designed and located specifically to meet the housing needs of the growing numbers of working- and middle-class citizens during the early twentieth century in Kansas City, Missouri. This property type was a basic and prevalent example of multi-family housing that emerged in the early twentieth century for working- and middle-class residents and introduced new residential housing organization and approaches to daily life in the City. In addition, as an excellent representative example of the types of modest multi-family residential buildings built near streetcar lines during the height of the post-World War I apartment building boom in Kansas City, it has significant associations with the economic conditions of Kansas City during the most prolific period of construction of apartment building prior to the end of World War II. The building is locally significant in the area of Architecture for its clearly conveyed associations with the Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building property type as documented in the MPDF.

² The end date of the historic contexts coincides with the Kansas City, Missouri City Council’s passage of a public accommodations act in 1964 as part of the passage of local, state, and federal civil rights legislation after the assassination of President John F. Kennedy. The change in local law was the beginning of wide-ranging changes in patterns of housing development and the design and types of “affordable” multi-family housing erected.

ELABORATION

BUILDING HISTORY

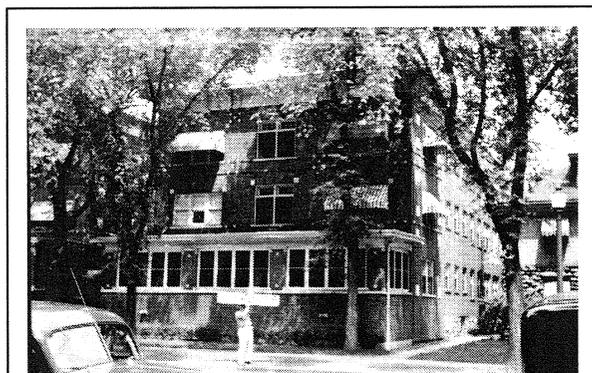

The Gillham Court Apartments Building was constructed in 1924-1925 as one of three identical “walk-up” apartment buildings built by real estate developer Harry E. Fisher. In addition to the Gillham Court Apartments Building, Fisher constructed a neighboring building to the south, Gillham Plaza Apartments at 3415 Gillham Road, which is no longer extant, and the Windsor Hall Apartments on a lot in the same block to the southeast at 3420 Locust Street. Fisher spent between $40,000 and $50,000 on each building. Each building measured approximately 39 feet by 105 feet and provided about two dozen small, self-sufficient apartment units for working- and middle-class occupants. The buildings’ locations, directly adjacent to the busy Gillham Road streetcar line on Gillham Road, allowed easy access to shopping districts and places of employment.

During the economic boom that occurred after World War I, the period from 1920 to 1929 represented the most prolific period of apartment construction in Kansas City prior to the end of World War II.³ In addition to the grand apartment hotels executed in high style designs that lined Armour and Linwood Boulevards at this time,⁴ developers erected buildings like the Gillham Court Apartments Building on the adjacent side streets and next to public transit streets and commercial centers to serve a clientele of more modest means. Although similar in size to low-rise apartment buildings, the Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building erected to house working- and middle-class tenants typically lacked the distinctive architectural style and expensive exterior and interior details and spaces of the apartment buildings erected for the upper and upper-middle classes. Instead, they commonly exhibited modest exterior decorative treatments, such as tapestry brickwork motifs and a broad cornice with decorative brackets. The public spaces featured a long, narrow, double-loaded corridor with compact open stairwells at each end. They had no formal entrance lobby beyond a small vestibule and had no elevator. Each floor featured numerous units and the interior apartment spaces were more compact than those found in apartment buildings designed for the more affluent, which contained flats with multiple rooms, particularly separate sleeping and dining quarters and fewer units per building.

During the post-World War I period, the neighborhood surrounding the Gillham Court Apartments Building was a neighborhood in transition. Large apartment hotels were replacing the late nineteenth century mansions erected by the City's wealthiest citizens along Armour and Linwood Boulevards between Broadway and The Paseo. Commercial development along Main Street also replaced large nineteenth century residences. Streetcar lines operating along boulevards, including Linwood and Main and along Gillham Road, stimulated commercial development and the construction of housing for the working and middle classes at the intersections of these public transit lines. By the 1920s, an array of large, high style apartment hotels and large churches dominated East Armour and Linwood Boulevards. Protected by deed restrictions, single-family residential buildings, some of considerable size, remained in adjacent single-family neighborhoods bounded by the boulevard system. By the end of the 1920s, the area within the boundaries of these major thoroughfares contained a wide variety of residential property types, including both modest and grand single-family residences, as well as low-rise, mid-rise, and high-rise apartment buildings. Among them at this time were approximately thirty Low-Rise Walk-Up apartment buildings that provided about seven hundred small apartment units housing working- and middle-class tenants. Of these, more than a third are no longer extant.

Tenant Analysis

Designed to meet the needs of the working class, the Gillham Court Apartments Building and its neighboring twins, which were also erected by Harry E. Fisher in the 1920s, housed a cross-section of lower- to middle-income individuals. The tenants from the 1920s through the 1950s included a high number of single women and widows, as well as numerous married couples and single men. The men generally made their livings in such occupations as clerks or salesmen, while the single women often worked as nurses or stenographers.

Long-term residency was not common, with the exception of the building manager, who was typically female and resided in apartment number 101 of the Gillham Court Apartments Building.⁵ Initially, only the manager had a telephone listing; however, telephone usage grew steadily through the 1930s and 1940s until the 1950s when about three-quarters of the tenants subscribed to telephone service. By the mid- to late 1950s, vacancy rates rose and at the same time telephone service dropped significantly, signifying a change in tenant type, and a possible drop in their income level.⁶

HARRY E. FISHER, BUILDER

Harry E. Fisher was born in 1893 in Kansas, the son of an English immigrant and a Kansan mother. At sixteen years of age he married his wife Alberta and they had one daughter, Frances. In 1920, the family lived on East 36th Street at The Paseo and Fisher made a living as a retail grocer. As the economic climate and the pace of construction grew after the end of World War I, beginning the early 1920s, Fisher entered into the construction business. The set of three buildings that includes the Gillham Court Apartments Building are among his earliest known projects. Shortly after their completion, in 1925 Fisher founded Fisher Realty Company, which maintained offices in the Commerce Building in the downtown central business district.⁷ Fisher constructed at least twenty-four additional buildings during the remainder of the 1920s, seventeen of which were apartment buildings. Fisher Realty Company was financially successful and by 1930, the Fisher family resided at 5345 Ward Parkway where they maintained three servants.

Fisher concentrated his real estate development primarily in the Midtown area of Kansas City, Missouri, with the majority of his apartment buildings located between West 40th and West 46th Streets, east of Roanoke Parkway and west of Broadway Boulevard. He often erected apartment houses in groups of two, three, or sometimes as many as four. Throughout his twenty-year career as a real estate developer, he and his realty company were eventually responsible for more than forty-one buildings throughout Kansas City. Among them are two small hotels and six single-family dwellings located along Ward Parkway and near Loose Park. One of these residences was his own personal residence, at 11 West 53rd Terrace, which is a contributing resource to the Simpson-Yeoman's/Country Side National Register Historic District. Among the prominent architects Fisher worked with were Charles A. Smith, architect of the Professional Building and known for his apartment and school buildings⁸; Nelle Peters, architect of more than two hundred apartment buildings in Kansas City; and Phillip Drotts, architect of the Clyde Manor and Newbern apartment buildings on East Armour Boulevard.⁹ Fisher worked most frequently with William J. Koch who designed more than thirty-four buildings in Kansas City, primarily single- and multi-family residential buildings, including twelve for Fisher designed between 1925 and 1936.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Gillham Court Apartments Building is an excellent example of the Low-Rise Walk-Up Apartment Building property type documented in the MPDF “Working-Class and Middle-Income Apartment Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri.” It has direct associations with the patterns of development of multi-family housing associated with the City’s historic parks and boulevards system and public transportation routes. It represents the evolution of residential buildings designed and located specifically to meet the housing needs of the growing numbers of working- and middle-class residents during the early twentieth century in Kansas City, Missouri. By virtue of its architectural integrity, it is a very good example of the type of modest multi-family residential building built near streetcar lines during the height of the post-World War I apartment building boom in Kansas City. It meets the MPDF registration requirements and integrity thresholds and clearly conveys both its historical and architectural associations.
