Describe present and historic physical appearance.WILLIAM S. AND MARY BECKETT HOUSE

SUMMARY: Located at 821 Third Street, Boonville, Cooper County, Missouri, the William S. Beckett House is an essentially unaltered example of a late Queen Anne style house. The brick, two-and-one-half story, single family dwelling displays many of the most common features of this architectural style, such as complex, steep hip and lower cross gable roofs and projecting bays. Despite minor alterations, the Beckett House retains sufficient physical characteristics to convey integrity of workmanship, design, and materials, in addition to its integrity of location and setting.

ELABORATION: The facade, or east-northeast elevation, is dominated by a projecting cross gable. Variation in texture is provided by imbricated shingles set in the gable end. A small, one-over-one double hung window is centered in the gable end. Corner brackets decorate the gable overhangs, and cutaway bay windows disrupt the flat wall surface. A single, one-over-one, double hung sash is set in each plane of the projecting bay on each level. Arched brick hood molds surmount each window on this gable and the remainder of the facade.

Decorative, terra-cotta panels which feature a six-pointed star-like design are set beneath the sills of windows parallel to the facade and on the southwest plane of the projecting cross gable. The northern half of the facade is divided into two symmetrical bays on each level. The entry level, southernmost bay is a door with transom, while the northernmost bay and the two second floor bays contain identical one-over-one, double hung windows. A hipped porch with pedimented entry and turned posts shelters the first floor bays and extends from the projecting cross gable to the northern edge of the facade. Imbricated shingles fill the gable of the pediment. The porch is sheathed with composition shingles, but the wooden flooring has been replaced with a concrete slab. A frieze which originally decorated the porch was removed due to deterioration.

The fenestration of the original two story section of the north-northwest elevation is asymmetrical. Two one-over-one, double hung windows are set in the western end of the elevation on the first floor, while a window in the center of the elevation is raised to provide illumination for an interior stair landing. On the second story a single identical window is located to the west of the center of the elevation. Soldier course, arched brick lintels crown each window on this elevation.

A brick, single story ell projects from the rear, or west-southwest, elevation. A brick, shed roofed addition is one of the few alterations to the Beckett House. Attached to the north-northwest elevation of the ell the addition projects several feet beyond the north-northwest elevation of the original house and is, therefore, visible when viewing the facade. The addition rests on a foundation of rusticated stone blocks, unlike the remainder of the house, which has a brick foundation. A single, one-over-one, double hung window with no lintel is set in the north-northwest wall of the addition. Two small, one-over-one, double hung windows are paired under a double rowlock, arched lintel in the center of the ell's gable. A porch which originally extended along the south-southeast elevation of the ell and rested on brick piers has been enclosed with board-and-batten wood siding. A triple hung sash is fixed in the west-southwest wall, while a door provides access in the south-southeast elevation of the enclosed porch. Entrance to the cellar is gained beneath the porch. A single, one-over-one, double hung window with arched soldier course lintel is set in the second floor on each side of the rear ell. Two chimneys pierce the roof of the rear elevation.

The remainder of the south-southeast elevation is distinguished by a second projecting cross gable identical to the gable on the facade. The only noticeable difference is the location of a decorative terra-cotta panel under every window. The remainder of the elevation is unbroken by bays. A single chimney rises from the roof to the east of the gable.

Alterations to the interior of the Beckett House have been minimal. Interior woodwork and trim are intact and have been restored. Ceiling height is unchanged. The only significant interior alterations are a modernized kitchen, enclosed rear porch, and utility room addition on the rear elevation.

State significance of property, and justify criteria, criteria considerations, and areas and periods of significance noted above.

SUMMARY: The William S. and Mary Beckett House, 821 Third Street, is significant under Criterion C in the area of ARCHITECTURE as a virtually unaltered example of the Queen Anne architectural style (see "Historic Resources of Boonville, Missouri: Additional Architectural Contexts--Queen Anne Residences"). Its elaborate massing, projecting wings and bays, complex hip roof with lower cross gables, and textural variation represent most of the distinctive elements of the style.

ELABORATION: William S. and Mary Beckett, who operated a grocery business in Boonville, constructed their house in 1903. Small town merchants, the Becketts adopted the prevalent Queen Anne style for their residence and employed most of the standard features which were distinctive to the style. The Becketts resided in the house until 1917, which has remained a single family dwelling until the present.
