SUMMARY: The James H. and Marietta Comfort House is located at 235 E. Jefferson in Kirkwood, St. Louis County, Missouri. Constructed ca. 1871, the Comfort house is a highly intact example of Property Type B., Italianate Houses. It meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document "Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri." The two story frame house combines a large version of a common vernacular form, the gabled ell, with high-style Italianate features. Typically Italianate features include an irregular plan, prominent bracketed cornices, and wood siding designed to mimic cut stone, complete with large quoins on most corners. The irregular plan is further enlivened by a polygonal window bay, and a large wrap-around porch which has slender, classically inspired columns. The house is highly intact; all exterior wall cladding and woodwork appears to be original, as do the tall two-over-two wood windows. Interior features are similarly intact. The house has two large rear ells, one of which may be original, and both of which were in place no later than 1926. The house sits far back on a large lot, which also contains a low modern frame garage. The garage, which is the only other resource on the property, is a non-contributing building. The house itself retains integrity in the area of materials, design, workmanship, and location. It is immediately recognizable to its period of significance, and is one of the larger intact Italianate houses in the core of Kirkwood.

ELABORATION: The Comfort house faces south to East Jefferson Street. It is two stories tall, with a one story front porch and a stone foundation. The large house combines the common vernacular form of a gabled ell with sophisticated Italianate styling. The architectural detailing used on the house is extensive enough to classify it as an example of the Italianate Houses property type.

The house has a narrow front-facing gable end, to which a side gable wing is set at a right angle. The one-story porch fronts the side gable wing and wraps around to cover much of the east elevation. The porch has a hipped roof and rests on slender round columns which have Tuscan derived capitals. The wood porch floor is slightly raised, with a wood trellis covering the open foundation. A one-story polygonal window bay is set near the front of the west side elevation. There are two large rear ells on the house; one of those may be original, and the other appears to date to the nineteenth century. (Both were definitely in place by the time the 1926 Sanborn Map was printed.)

The house has many architectural features which are typical of the Italianate Houses property type in Kirkwood. It is clad with wide shiplap wood siding, and has wood quoins at all major corners. The house has a low-pitched gable roof with wide overhangs. The roofline is accented by a dentiled cornice and widely spaced scrolled brackets which are set in pairs. The front facing gable is further ornamented with a raking cornice and prominent cornice returns. The west window bay has a matching cornice, also with dentils and paired brackets.

The front door of the house is wood, with a single large fixed glass pane. The doorway includes narrow sidelights, and a large transom above. Nearly all the windows on the original main portion of the house are two-over-two, double-hung wood sash, with shallow pitched, integral pedimented surrounds. The windows beneath the front porch are two-over-two-over-two, triple-hung sash, and provide access to the porch from the house. The windows on the front and east elevation of the original portion have louvered shutters. The first story windows are slightly taller than those on the second. There are two interior fireplaces extending from the roof of the gable-front wing; both have corbeled brick tops.

The rear ells project from the north, or rear elevation. Both are two stories tall, but have lower roofs than the front part of the house. The second story of the ell closest to the main block of the house is clad with the same type of wide, shiplap siding found on the front, and has narrow wood clapboards on the first. Behind and perpendicular to that ell is a hip roof addition. That section of the house has narrow wood clapboards, and narrow one-over-one, double sash windows.

The interior of the house also contains a good deal of original fabric. The large rooms have high ceilings, early or original wood floors, and plaster walls. Much interior woodwork is intact, including high molded baseboards and heavy molded trim along the ceilings. The dining room fireplace has a simple white marble mantelpiece which is also early or original.

The house sits well back from the street, near the rear of a nearly half-acre lot. It is set back from the sidewalk considerably more than are the houses around it, and is many decades older than its nearest neighbors. (The 1926 Sanborn map of the neighborhood shows that the houses on either side of it were built after that date.) A straight paved sidewalk leads from the street to the front door, and also curves around the front porch to the eastern side of the building. The foundation is lined with deciduous shrubs and small, evergreen trees. There are a few large deciduous shade trees on the property as well. A two-car frame garage was built in 1990 at the northwest corner of the house, near the rear of the property.

The Comfort house is clearly the oldest house in its immediate surroundings, and is set apart from its neighbors by its age and extra deep setback. It is in excellent condition, and is immediately recognizable to its period of significance.

SUMMARY: The James H. and Marietta Comfort House, at 235 E. Jefferson, is significant under Criterion C in the area of ARCHITECTURE, as a large highly intact Italianate house. The irregular massing, bracketed cornices, elaborate wall treatments, and general architectural detailing of the house are all typical of Property Type B: Italianate Houses. The house meets the registration requirements for that property type set forth in the MPS Cover document “Historic Resources of Kirkwood, Missouri,” and falls under the contexts “The Creation of Kirkwood, a Planned Railroad Suburb--1851-1864”, and “The Town of Kirkwood: Late Nineteenth Century Suburban Growth--1865-1898”. This is one of the largest and most intact examples of the Italianate style left in the historic core of Kirkwood. The house gains further significance from its association with James H. Comfort, who, as one of the three original trustees of the Kirkwood Association, was instrumental in the early development of the community. Comfort bought this property from the Kirkwood Association in 1853, and appears to have built and moved into this house by 1872. The period of significance for the property therefore runs from 1871 to ca. 1926, by which time the house had taken its current form. The house is in excellent condition, and exhibits a high degree of integrity of location, design, materials, workmanship, feeling and association. It is clearly representative of its historic time and place.

ELABORATION: The Comfort house is a large, highly intact example of the Italianate House property type. Even though the basic footprint of this house follows a common vernacular form, it exhibits a notably high level of styling. It is therefore most accurately classified within the Italianate Houses property type, rather than within the Nineteenth Century Vernacular Houses category, which refers to much simpler dwellings.

The general form of the house is that of a large gabled ell, to which have been added stylistic features which were popular at the time of its construction. Among the most notable high-style elements of the house are the well-executed exterior wall finishes. The beveled wall boards and distinctive quoins on all major corners effectively mimic cut stone blocks. Other elements characteristic of the Italianate style include a low-pitched gable roof with wide, overhanging eaves, a dentiled cornice, decorative roof brackets, and classically inspired porch columns. The house shares those design elements with several other Italianate houses in the community which are of roughly the same age and size. It is especially similar to the Elijah Unsell House, at 615 East Monroe Street, which is of roughly the same form and age.

The first owners of this house were James H. and Marietta Comfort, who bought the property during the first public sale of lots to ever occur in Kirkwood. James H. Comfort purchased the comfort was aware of that initial offering of lots in Kirkwood; he was a founding member of the Kirkwood Association, and one of the three original trustees of the organization.

A lawyer as well as real estate speculator, Comfort purchased several properties in both the city and county of St. Louis during the 1860s and 1870s. It was not until around 1872, however, that Comfort moved to Kirkwood. The Comfort family resided in Kirkwood until 1878, by which time James Comfort had died, and the property had passed into the hands of what was to become a long string of female owners. Catherine J. Hoyt, widow of Cyrus G. Hoyt, and Marietta Comfort, widow of James H. Comfort, appear to have switched addresses in the late 1870s. Marietta Comfort is listed in an 1879 directory as living at 3036 Franklin Avenue in St. Louis, where Catherine J. Hoyt had lived just the year before. The 1878 atlas map of Kirkwood indicates that the lot at that time was owned by Catherine Hoyt.

The property was next sold in 1880 to Asenath A. Phelps, widow of Harlow Phelps. (Locally, the house is known as the Hoyt-Phelps House.) The Phelps family had raised the family of Alfred Douglas Donovan after the Civil War. Harlow Phelps fought for the Confederacy with his good friend, Alfred Donovan. The two men promised each other that if either of them died in the war, the other would take care of his family. Donovan died near the end of the war, and Harlow Phelps brought Donovan’s family with him to Kirkwood to raise with his own. One of the boys was Douglas Donovan, who later became the architect for the 1893 Kirkwood Train Station, which is listed individually in the National Register.

Historic atlas maps show that the house occupied a very large lot for much of its early history. Atlas maps from 1878 to 1909 show a full half of the block as a single parcel, and the 1926 Sanborn map of the property shows that although it was slightly smaller then, it was still close to its original size. The Sanborn map also recorded 2 outbuildings near the north edge of the block, one of which appears to have been relatively large; that part of the block is no longer associated with the house, and neither outbuilding has survived. The 1909 atlas map shows it as the property of Maria B. Floyd. Maria Floyd may have been related to George C. Floyd, who served as an alderman for Kirkwood from 1907 to 1909. The property was subdivided in 1924 and 1925 by its owner at the time, Margaret A. Johnson, and again sometime after the Sanborn map was published.

2 Book R-6, page 81, at the Recorder of Deeds Office of St. Louis. The property had been expanded to include the entire east half of the block by the time it was mapped for the 1878 Atlas.

The house stands out today by virtue of a very deep setback, and is immediately recognizable as one of the oldest houses on the block. The large frame house is in excellent condition. It has seen no changes of note in the last century, and from the street it appears today much as it did when it was home to one of the officers of the Kirkwood Association.
