SUMMARY

Mount Washington School at 570 Evanston Avenue, Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, is a two-story T-shaped brick building comprised of two distinct sections that illustrate three separate building campaigns. The square west leg of the T is the earliest section with the west half built in 1903 and the east half built in 1910. The long east leg of the T, built in 1924, connects to the east elevation of the earlier block. While all three sections have red brick walls, they differ in architectural style, fenestration, and roof form. Buff brick quoins at the corners, flat arches over the first floor windows, and corbelling above the second floor windows communicate the Classical Revival style of the 1903 block. Bands of windows, unadorned masonry, and hipped roof with wide overhanging eaves communicate Prairie style influences on the 1910 block. The T-shape 1924 addition uses the same red brick and limestone to evoke the Spanish Revival style with arched door and window openings, ornamental brick work, and red clay tile pent roofs. The interior remains intact. The 1903 and 1910 blocks contain classrooms, while the 1924 block has classrooms and support spaces, like the gymnasium, auditorium, cafeteria, and a branch of the public library, which had its own exterior entrance. Central halls and radiating classrooms define the 1903/1910 block, while double-loaded linear corridors organize the later addition. Corridors and classrooms retain historic finishes, such as wood trim, built-ins, and chalkboards. Classroom doors were replaced throughout the building. Exterior windows and doors were also replaced, but the historic masonry openings remain intact. These changes do not diminish one's understanding of the building as a school. It retains integrity of location, setting, design, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association. Mount Washington School is an excellent example of the evolution of public school architecture in Jackson County, Missouri and includes both the Ward School/Graded School and the Early Twentieth Century/Progressive Era School property sub-types defined in the Multiple Property Documentation Form (MPDF) "Historic Resources of the Kansas City Missouri School District Pre-1970."

ELABORATION

Mount Washington School sits on the north side of Independence Avenue between Evanston and Arlington Avenues in Independence, Missouri. The expansive lot occupies the summit of a large hill with the school building anchoring the southeast corner of the property. Paved play areas surround the school on the north, south and west.

A stone retaining wall runs along the south side of the lot, curving to the north at the southwest corner. Public sidewalks line the west, south, and east sides of the lot. Concrete stairs rise from the sidewalks along Independence Avenue and Arlington Avenue to the building and playground. A concrete driveway north of the building accesses the property from Evanston Avenue. The non-contributing one-story brick garage or storage building sits just north of the driveway.

Mount Washington School sits at the heart of a small residential enclave three miles northwest of downtown Independence. U.S. Highway 24, which corresponds to Independence Avenue/Winner Road as it travels east from Kansas City, dips to the south between E. 18th Street and E. Wilson Road. This bend in the road along with curving railroad alignments to the east and west encircle the neighborhood. One- and two-story single family dwellings that date to the early twentieth century surround the school property. The neighborhood also includes a few modest churches and a lodge hall of similar vintage along Independence Avenue.

MOUNT WASHINGTON SCHOOL – 1903, 1910, 1924 (CONTRIBUTING)

Exterior

The original four-room school (1903) is now the west end of the building. In 1910 a four-room block was added to the end east of the 1903 school. The 1910 addition mimicked the 1903 block in size, massing, and roof shape with differences evident in the fenestration and architectural details. The T-shaped 1924 addition attached to the east end of the 1910 block. The 1903 and 1910 blocks housed classrooms, while the 1924 addition contained regular and specialty classrooms as well as support spaces (cafeteria, library, gymnasium, and auditorium). The library at the south end of the 1924 addition was historically the public library branch serving the area surrounding the school. It had a dedicated exterior entrance.

The 1903 and 1910 blocks are rectangular in plan and appear to match at first glance due to their identical massing and common materials. Both blocks have flat red brick walls, limestone foundations, and hipped roofs. Hipped dormers rise from the north and south roof slopes and the wide eaves overhang the walls on each elevation. Dentiled molding rings the top of the blocks below the eaves, further unifying their appearance.

Differences in masonry detailing and fenestration communicate subtle variations in architectural style. Elements of the Classical Revival Style on the 1903 block include buff brick quoining at the corners, flat arches over the first-floor windows, and corbelling above the second-floor windows. The recessed central portion of the west wall (the 1903 front entrance) has an arched doorway on the first floor and arched windows on the second floor, both executed in buff brick. A stone tablet above the doorway is etched with the words "Mt-Washington School, Jan. 1 1903."

The 1910 block lacks the masonry details that grace the 1903 block, and it has ribbons of windows that span the north and south elevations instead of individual punched openings. The unadorned masonry and the fenestration pattern, together with the massing, the hip roof and wide eaves, suggests Prairie Style influences.

When the 1910 addition was constructed the main entrance to the school was reoriented to the south elevation, facing Independence Avenue. A portico with brick pillars supporting a gable roof was added between the blocks to shelter the recessed entry at the top of the stairs.

The 1924 addition, facing Evanston Avenue, presents a third architectural variant with very different massing and styling from the earlier blocks. Although it shares the vocabulary of red brick walls and limestone windowsills, the brick is more polychromatic and the long rectangular facades have elements of Spanish Revival styling, including arched doorways and windows, red clay tile on pent roofs and ornamental brickwork at the parapet, stringcourse, and above the doorways.

The 1924 block also accommodated different functions. In addition to classrooms, the north end of the 1924 addition houses the gymnasium on the lower level and the auditorium on the upper floor. A branch of the local public library occupied the first floor at the south end of the block. The stone tablet above the library entrance is inscribed "PUBLIC LIBRARY WASHINGTON BRANCH." Entrances at the center of the east elevation provide access to classrooms, gymnasium, and auditorium and in the south elevation access to the library.

Today, non-historic aluminum doors and windows fill the original openings of the school. Historic evidence indicates that the 1903 block had two-over-two hung windows; the 1910 block had one-over-one hung windows; and the 1924 block had six-over-six hung windows in most openings. Above the library was a Fresh Air classroom. Because the windows of this classroom were left open almost year round it had twelve-pane steel windows with center pivot sashes.

Interior

The historic building plan remains intact on the interior. The 1903 and 1910 blocks have classrooms arranged around a central hall on the first and second floors. Stair halls on the east and west sides provide vertical circulation between the basement and the second floor. The east stair also connects the 1910 and 1924 blocks, which have different floor heights at each level. The 1924 block has classrooms flanking double-loaded corridors. A stair hall at the center of the east wall provides vertical circulation in this block.

Throughout the building, classrooms retain historic wood trim, built-ins, and chalkboards. Corridors retain historic trim but classroom doors have been replaced with non-historic wood doors and frames. Historic doors, multi-light sidelights and transoms remain at the entry vestibules throughout the building. With the exception of the gym, which has an exposed wood floor, carpet covers the building's historic wood (1903 & 1910) and concrete (1924) floors.

AUXILIARY BUILDING – 1986 (NON-CONTRIBUTING)

A one-story red brick building with a concrete base stands just north of the driveway that runs along the north elevation of the 1924 block. The building has an overhead metal garage door in the south elevation, a single opening with a metal slab door on the north elevation, and a single window opening on the west elevation. This small building was constructed outside the period of significance in 1986 and is therefore non-contributing.

INTEGRITY

Mount Washington School retains excellent integrity. It is an outstanding example of both a Ward/Graded School and an Early Twentieth Century/Progressive Era School, property types defined in the MPDF "Historic Resources of the Kansas City Missouri School District Pre-1970." The property reflects the evolution of public school architecture in connection with the Kansas City, Missouri School District (District). The property meets the general registration requirements of the MPDF, while each section of the building meets the registration requirements specific to its property subtype. The Mount Washington School retains excellent architectural integrity to communicate the sequential building campaigns and the design styles popular at the time of construction. On the exterior and interior, the property clearly conveys its historic educational function, while the massing, materials, and ornament communicate vernacular expressions of Classical Revival, Prairie School, and Spanish Revival styling, architectural idioms commonly applied to school buildings of this era. The 1924 block illustrates the design aesthetic of Kansas City Board of Education Architect Charles A. Smith. Features of Progressive Era programs implemented in schools throughout the District also remain evident, including the branch library, the Fresh Air classroom, and the integrated, stacked auditorium and gymnasium. Although the original windows and doors have been replaced, the new fenestration does not alter the historic masonry openings. The configuration of corridors, gymnasium, and auditorium remain intact. The majority of the classrooms retain their original configurations and some finishes. The alterations exhibited by Mount Washington School are common among educational resources and do not compromise its integrity. Overall the building clearly communicates feelings about and associations with its original design and educational function.

SUMMARY

Mount Washington School, located at 570 Evanston Avenue, Independence, Jackson County, Missouri, is locally significant under National Register Criterion A for the area of EDUCATION and Criterion C for the area of ARCHITECTURE. Built over the course of twenty years, the property reflects the evolution of public school architecture and educational philosophy. The sections of the Mount Washington School illustrate two different property types identified in the Multiple Property Documentation Form (MPDF) "Historic Resources of the Kansas City Missouri School District Pre-1970." The earliest section of the building was constructed in 1903 for the Mount Washington School District. The growing local student population required additional space, resulting in two additional building campaigns in 1910 and 1924, each of which roughly doubled the size of the existing school. Andrew B. Anderson designed the 1903 block and, presumably, the 1910 block.¹ These sections illustrate the Ward School/Graded School property type. The Kansas City Missouri School District (District) annexed the Mount Washington School District in 1911 and operated the school until 2007. Charles A. Smith, the Kansas City, Missouri Board of Education Architect, designed the 1924 addition, incorporating many of the Progressive Era features he promoted for schools in the District, such as a branch of the public library, a large Fresh Air classroom, and an integrated auditorium and gymnasium. The historic configuration and many finishes remain intact on both the exterior and interior of Mount Washington School, reflecting the evolution of educational philosophies discussed in the context "Public Education in Kansas City, Missouri (1867-1970)," specifically the "Early Years (1867-1899)" and "Progressive Era (1900-1932)" sub-contexts. The nominated resource also reflects the architectural evolution of school buildings, as described in the context "Public School Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri," specifically the "Late Nineteenth Century Schools (1867-1899)" and "Early Twentieth Century Schools (1900-1940)" sub-contexts. The Mount Washington School continues to communicate its historic educational function and the eras in which it was constructed. The period of significance is 1903 through 1963, beginning with the date of construction and ending with the fifty-year closing date for periods of significance where activities begun historically continue to have importance but no more specific date can be defined.

ELABORATION

Mount Washington was a small town located between the larger cities of Kansas City and Independence in unincorporated Jackson County, Missouri.² The original Mount Washington

¹ Drawings or building permits confirming Anderson as the architect of the 1910 block were not found. However, in 1909 Anderson was listed in city directories as a resident of Mount Washington, having moved from Kansas City, where he still maintained his practice.

School was built in 1861 at Kentucky and Home Avenues (now the site of Fairmount School). It served children in a district that extended from Beaumont Street on the west, Van Horn Road on the south, the Missouri River on the north, and the Independence city limit (Forest Avenue) on the east. As the population grew through the end of the century, the school became overcrowded and the Mount Washington School District built a second school for local students.

Shortly after 1900, the State Superintendent of Public Schools advocated the consolidation of rural districts to pool resources for larger student populations. Having more students in each age group meant that a district could implement graded schools, which provided a more focused curriculum than rural school houses.³ Once the Mount Washington district consolidated, it needed a new school to serve all of its students. In 1903 the district erected a four-room graded school on Independence Avenue between Evanston and Arlington Avenues.⁴ The nameplate above the main entrance to this section of the building is inscribed with the name of the school "Mount Washington School" and the date of construction "Jan 1 1903." While this building was constructed shortly after 1899, the architecture resembles other Kansas City School District schools constructed in the late 1800s, as described in the context "Public School Buildings of Kansas City (1867-1970): Late Nineteenth Century Schools (1867-1899)," highlighting local design trends.

The student population of the Mount Washington School quickly outgrew the four-room building. In 1910 an addition that mimicked the plan and massing of the original building was constructed to the east, doubling the size of the school. The district also built the Fairmount School two blocks north and four blocks east in 1909.⁵

The Mount Washington School as it stood in 1910 reflects the prevailing educational philosophy of the late nineteenth century, particularly in a more rural area. Rather than have students of all ages in a single classroom, the eight nearly identical classrooms were each dedicated to a separate grade. This arrangement along with the building form and massing typifies the Ward School/Graded School property type defined in the MPDF. While the earliest sections of the Mount Washington School resemble the graded schools designed throughout the Kansas City School District in the late nineteenth century, the treatment of each section (Classical Revival on the west and Prairie School on the east) illustrates the variety of architectural influences present at the turn of the twentieth century. The 1903/1910 portion of the school meets the registration requirements for the Ward School/Graded School property type, specifically retaining its historic square form and vertical massing, the hipped roof with wide overhanging eaves and dormers, the brick cladding with limestone trim, and its historic fenestration patterns.

The symmetrical west (originally the front) façade has a recessed entry. The central halls that organize the interior are surrounded by classrooms along the perimeter walls. Although the 1910 section exhibits slight differences in architectural treatment, it exhibits the same form and materials as the 1903 section. The buff brick quoining, flat-arched lintels, and round-arches that ornament the symmetrical west façade communicate the Classical Revival style on the 1903 section. The banded windows and lack of ornament on the 1910 section reflect the Prairie School influence. These were architectural styles commonly employed in school design at the turn of the twentieth century.

In 1911 the Mount Washington School Board called a special election, asking voters whether Mount Washington should seek annexation by the Kansas City, Missouri School District. This would provide students access to better quality high schools and other advantages associated with a much larger school district. Voters unanimously agreed with the proposition, with 95 votes in favor of annexation and none against it. Mount Washington became part of the Kansas City School District by 1913. At the time, the two Mount Washington schools (Mount Washington School and Fairmount School) had a total enrollment of 350 students, led by ten teachers.⁶

Enrollment at Mount Washington South reached 600 pupils by 1920, and the building was bursting at its seams. A two-room frame annex was built east of the school to ease the overcrowding, but it did not provide enough relief. In 1924 Charles A. Smith, Kansas City Board of Education Architect, designed a large addition for the east end of the 1910 block, providing twelve additional classrooms, a gymnasium, an auditorium, and a cafeteria.⁷ The earlier building was also renovated. Basement rooms were converted to playrooms and a manual training room, new openings were cut to connect to the addition, and new linoleum flooring was installed in classrooms and offices.⁸

The 1924 addition to the Mount Washington School meets the registration requirements for the Early Twentieth Century/Progressive Era School, specifically the Elementary School subtype defined in the MPDF. The addition to Mount Washington shares many architectural attributes with other schools designed by Smith during this period, including the Spanish Revival façade treatments, the Fresh Air classroom, and the integration of a branch library. The plan highlights the Progressive Era programs implemented throughout the District that provided a diverse curriculum and emphasized improved hygiene and safety, as described in the historic context “Public Education in Kansas City, Missouri (1867-1970): Progressive Era (1900-1932)” and “Public School Buildings in Kansas City, Missouri (1867-1970): Early Twentieth Century Schools (1900-1940).” Specialty classrooms at the Mount Washington School designated for vocational training included cooking, sewing, and manual training. The basement had large lavatories, showers and locker rooms, while the second floor held a Fresh Air classroom. This expansive room had operable steel windows on three sides to accommodate children deemed at risk for tuberculosis. Smith's addition retains its historic irregular form, horizontal massing, and flat roof. The stacked auditorium and gymnasium and the outdoor play areas are extant, illustrating the importance of recreation during this period. Although it is an addition, this section of the building could stand on its own as a separate school with its own regular and specialty classrooms and support spaces.

Public Library

The Kansas City Board of Education established the Public Library of Kansas City in 1873 as an important resource for collecting and disseminating information for use by officers, teachers, and pupils in the District.⁹ Kansas City touted itself as the first city to establish branches of the public library in its public school buildings.¹⁰ As the library system grew during subsequent decades, branch libraries opened in new and existing buildings throughout the city. Despite the long-standing association of the public library with the public school system, the first branch library incorporated into an existing public school did not arrive until 1911 with the opening of Switzer School. The first schools specifically designed with branch libraries were Karnes School (1913), Northeast High School (1914), and Swinney School (1914). The 1924 addition to the Mount Washington School included the Washington Branch of the public library. This room had its own entrance facing Independence Avenue, illustrating its important tie to the community.

Mount Washington School remained in the Kansas City, Missouri School District until 2007 when Independence voters elected to transfer seven schools from the Kansas City, Missouri School District to the Independence School District. The Independence School District did not reopen Mount Washington School, and it has been vacant since 2008.
