The Savoy Hotel and Savoy Grill, constructed ca. 1890s-1906, is a late nineteenth century hotel building with early twentieth century additions and Neo-Classic and Art Nouveau features in its design. It faces north on 9th Street between an alley and Central Street in downtown Kansas City on a site sloping approximately five feet from southwest to northeast. The modified "E" plan building is 164.25 feet east-west and 110 feet north-south.

Old views and newspaper and architectural magazine articles indicate four construction phases for the building: 1) the original, five-story 9th Street building, ca. early 1890s, 2) a sixth story addition, ca. 1898-1900, 3) six-story rear extensions to the east and west wings, ca. 1903, and 4) the seven-story western addition, ca. 1905-1906.

The foundations are constructed of stone 30 inches thick.

The exterior walls are constructed of brick now painted yellow. The ground story wall on the 9th Street side is faced with cream-colored terra cotta. The upper brick wall surfaces are moderately ornamented with quoins on the third and fourth stories, recessed spandrels with raised central panels below the sixth story windows, and corbeled brickwork at the cornice level.

The main entrance is centered on the north facade of the original building giving access to the lobby. Secondary entrances on the north facade open into the Savoy Grill and a barber shop. Services entrances and emergency exits are located on the other three sides of the building.

Double-hung window sash with one pane of glass per sash predominate throughout. Some second and third story windows have transoms. Street level windows on 9th Street are the store front type with leaded transoms in the barber and leaded art glass in the Savoy Grill. A semi-circular window is centered above the lobby entrance at the second story level.

The chimneys are located on the southern side of the building and in the hollow of the "E."

The earlier, eastern section of the building has a wood-frame structure. Fireproof, steel-frame construction was used in the western section.

The basement is divided into two separate sections reflecting the construction chronology of the building. The mechanical plant, furnace, boilers and refrigeration equipment are housed in the basement. The superstructure is borne on exterior bearing walls, stone masonry partition walls, iron columns and steel columns (fabricated of two channels and two plates bolted together).

The ground floor at street level is occupied by the Savoy Grill and its recent expansion into the former hotel lobby. At the east end it houses a barber shop. The Grill is the primary interior feature having preserved intact its turn-of-the-century interior including the bar, high-backed oak booths, cashier's stand, mural paintings of the Santa Fe Trail by Edward J. Holslag, and terrazzo floor. The original art glass windows of the western addition have recently been copied for the rooms into which the Grill has expanded. An important feature of the former hotel lobby--now part of the restaurant area--is a 15 foot in diameter art glass dome under a skylight in the central court of the building.

The cigar stand is now used as a sideboard for the restaurant. The hotel desk is used as a bar with the room key pigeon holes used for horizontal storage of wine.

On the second through sixth floors rooms are arranged along both sides of the main (east-west) hallway, in the east wing along the east side of the hallway, and in the west wing along the west and east sides of the hallway. Service rooms are concentrated in the southwest corner of each story.

Comparison of the present fabric with several old views in the possession of the owner indicates the following alterations and additions to the building:

1) Enlarging the original five-story, symmetrical, seven-bay building to an asymmetrical, 10-bay building with six full stories and seven stories at the west end. A Romanesque revival wall treatment of the original building was modified with a classically derived cornice.

2) Sheathing the original cast-iron street-level facade on 9th Street in terra cotta and removal of an original cast-iron marquee in front of the lobby entrance.

3) Altering fifth story windows by removing transoms and giving straight lintels to round-arch windows.

4) The eccentric seventh story was originally planned as a "ball room" and "roof garden" adjunct to the Grill. The concept evidently proved unworkable as the seventh story was early subdivided into hotel rooms and a corridor following the standard floor plan of floors 2-6. The fenestration pattern in this section--three large windows per bay separated by narrow mullions--gives it quite a different appearance from the rest of the building.

5) Moving the Savoy Bar and Savoy Grill from the original structure's ground story to the new addition in 1905-1906 and then expanding during the 1960s and 1970s back into most of the original ground story.

The building is in good structural condition and is well maintained. The current owner put on a new roof, rewired the building, and painted the exterior since purchasing the hotel in 1965. He is implementing a program of improving the mechanical system and refurbishing the interior.

FOOTNOTES

The Savoy Hotel and Savoy Grill in Kansas City, Missouri, constructed ca. 1890s-1906 provides an authentic turn-of-the-century setting preserved intact. Here one can experience the feeling and flavor of a comfortable, period restaurant where the quality of service and menu offerings have been maintained throughout the years since its opening.

The art glass windows represent an exceptionally well maintained and rare example of Art Nouveau influence in America. The highly stylized, geometric, and attenuated design of the stained-glass windows is thoroughly complemented by the entire turn-of-the-century ambience of the grill. The present owner, moreover, is aware of these values, and is dedicated to the maintenance of the grill in its original state.

Although the restaurant is the most notable portion of the building, the hotel is in a good state of preservation and it is capable of being revived as an historic in-town hotel facility. Historically this hotel was located in the heart of Kansas City's late nineteenth century business district. The provision of service industries such as hotels and restaurants represents an important and supportive effect of Kansas City's late nineteenth century commercial building boom. Originally open exclusively to men, the Grill has traditionally offered a menu of hearty entrees such as lobster, Alaskan crab, and beef and buffalo steaks.

Information about the original designer/architect is lacking from the record but may be uncovered in future historical research on the building. A local firm, Van Brunt and Howe, designed the ca. 1898-1900 remodeling of the main floor and the addition of a sixth story. The Arbuckle Brothers, known locally as the "Coffee Kings," were the early owners of the Savoy. The hotel was leased to the Ewins-Child Hotel company during the turn-of-the century period when the building was enlarged three times in response to a pressing need for more hotel space. The heirs of the Arbuckle Brothers continued to own the property until October 22, 1943, when the Park Central Investment Company purchased the building.

The tradition and wide popularity of the Grill were so well established that when the facility was closed in 1937 such a clamor arose that it was opened again within several days and has remained open ever since. During the early 1940s the hotel was known as the Milner Hotel and later the Earle Hotel before being renamed the Savoy. The Savoy again changed hands in 1962 when it was purchased by the Savoy Investment Company. Then in 1965 Donald F. Lee, who had owned and operated the Grill since 1960, purchased the entire hotel building.

In 1965, 1967, and 1973 Lee opened additional rooms of the Grill expanding into the former hotel lobby and associated rooms. Two of these rooms feature hand-crafted stained glass windows copied from the original windows in the western section of the Grill.

Lee plans to continue upgrading the restaurant facilities and the hotel interior. He intends to continue operation of the Savoy Grill in the established tradition. The building is not threatened by any development projects or programs in downtown Kansas City.

This building is being nominated to the National Register of Historic Places because of its importance as an element in Kansas City's social and economic history.
