The surviving carriage house of the former Miles A. Seed estate is a one-and-a-half story L-shaped frame structure with board-and-batten siding. The building measures 40 feet on its longest side, paralleling College Avenue, and 30 feet at the rear. The front, which faces the back of a row of residences on Hord Avenue to the north, is 17 feet wide. Crowning the angle of the roof is a pyramid-roofed louvered cupola. The roof itself is gabled at the north and east ends, but joined by a lean-to addition to the south. The main building has a brick foundation, but the lean-to is open. The east gable is ornamented by a radiating patterned inset at its apex, while the north gable has a hipped surface ornamented by fishscale shingles sheltering the attic door. The projecting hip is supported on jig-saw scrolled brackets. The double attic door is glazed and paneled. The walls to either side of this door are covered with fishscale shingles and decorated with half-round sunburst or chrysanthemum decorations. Underlining this level is an overhanging shelf-like roof supported by seven scalloped brackets. The main barn door below is double, each half patterned with an x above and below a blank central panel. The doors slide on tracks. A similarly designed door, but in one piece, hangs from a track on the east side of the lean-to. The main east end has two windows, one at first-floor level and a second above it, slightly arched, breaking into the clapboarded gable area. Both are double-hung, two-over-two. The north side of the east wing has a window and a door. The window’s upper sash has a geometrical pattern of colored glass, while the lower sash has two panes. The paneled door is sheltered by a deeply overhanging shed-roofed hood on paneled triangular brackets. On the west side of the building are two boarded-up windows, while a low triangular dormer breaks the roofline. Other openings in the lean-to addition have also been boarded up. Throughout the building the battens rise to an arcade cut in horizontal boards.

The barn sits close to College Avenue behind a row of three one-story four-unit houses facing Hord Avenue to the north; they occupy the site of the original Seed Mansion. To the south of the barn is a driveway leading to a parking area. Along College Avenue is a board fence, behind which a row of trees screens the barn in summer.
The Miles A. Seed Carriage House is eligible for listing in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C, in that it embodies the distinctive characteristics of a type, period, or method of construction, namely the Queen Anne style in its period of greatest popularity.

Although the Carriage House is a small building, it incorporates many of the salient characteristics of the Queen Anne style. Among these, according to J.-G. Blumenson in his definitive book, Identifying American Architecture, are an asymmetrical composition consisting of a variety of forms, textures, materials and colors. "The textured wall surfaces occasionally are complemented by colored glass panels in the window."' Marcus Whiffen elaborates on this feature in his book, American Architecture Since 1780: "Windows are of many forms, straight-topped or round arched; they may be glazed with plate glass or sometimes in the upper parts only, with small panes set in lead or wooden sash. Roofs are high and multiple. Gables contribute much to the overall effect and are given many different treatments." All these characteristics are evident in the Miles Seed Barn. A particularly telling feature of the barn is the pair of half-round radiating ornaments seen on the north front. At first glance they may appear to be sunbursts, but the rays have rounded ends like flower petals, and they are more likely to be Japanese chrysanthemums, an imperial motif taken from the Japanese wares that were one source of the high-style Queen Anne movement in England.3

The carriage house is one of very few buildings of its type surviving in St. Louis County. Recent surveys of Jennings, Ferguson and Florissant, the largest 19th-century communities in the north part of the county, did not identify any other significant examples. The Pine Lawn Carriage House, south of Jennings in the municipality of Pine Lawn, is a mansarded example surviving from a country estate. It is already listed in the National Register.

The carriage house dates to the ownership of the property by Miles A. Seed, who acquired it in 1887 and retained ownership until 1910.4 Born in England in 1842, Seed began a career as a portrait photographer in St. Louis after the Civil War.5 By the early 1870s he began manufacturing photographic supplies, and in 1883 he incorporated the Miles A. Seed Dry Plate Company specifically to be located in the village of Woodland.6 Woodland was a train stop that gave its name to a diffuse community later to become the City of Jennings. It was an attractive location for the fabrication of photographic plates because of its clean air and pure water. The success of Seed Dry Plate caused the whole community to prosper. In its field the company rivaled George Eastman of Rochester, New York, and by 1902 the threat of ruinous competition with him led Seed Dry Plate to sell out.7 In 1913 operations were moved to Rochester, but by then Miles Seed had moved on to new endeavors in Westchester County, New York.
