deadens footfalls and shuffling of feet. On either side of the lobby illuminated signs direct the patrons to the two rest rooms, each which has wash stand, drinking fountain, mirror and stool. The sidewalls of the auditorium have been painted to resemble the walls of a moss grown Medieval Castle. A silver beading runs the length of each side-wall to the top of the maroon dado. At intervals the beading rises through a silver medallion supporting indirect lighting fixtures composed of opal glass slabs inside of which are many colored bulbs. The ceiling is bare of lamps. The indirect sidewall fixtures are capable of reproducing every color of the rainbow. Reddish lights are used in cold weather, and green or blue in summer for a cooling effect.

The theatre was originally heated with automatic oil burners but now has natural gas. It is supplemented by a blower system. Cool air is sucked in from the lobby through a huge duct underneath the concrete floor. It is warmed and forced out of two large grills in front of the stage. In summertime, chilled, washed air circulates through the building by an air pressure blower. The ceiling is equipped with blowers and ventilators to permit the free egress of heated air through the roof.

Built of cinder blocks and yellow pressed brick the State Theatre is practically fireproof. Steel trusses support the roof. The floor is concrete.

near the sound technicians finished adjusting the delicate apparatus and checking acoustics, while expert machinists and electricians put the final touches on the intricate mechanisms of the projection room. All was in readiness when the standing room only crowd began pouring in.

For days before the opening, a great many telegrams from Hollywood were received by Mr. Harttman congratulating the owners on the fine building. Among those heard from were Edward G. Robinson, Pat O'Brien and Bette Davis.

The building and equipment cost $24,000 a large sum of money in 1938, but there is no more modern picture theatre in Northwest Missouri than the State Theatre. It stands emblematic of the faith these Kansas City men had in Mound City and the surrounding territory.

History and Significance

This was the site of the Holt County Bank from about 1892 till it went into receivership in 1932. It was sold by special commissioner to H.P. Thomas who soon sold it to D.C. Perry and his wife in 1932. In October, 1932, they sold a half interest to Jennie F. Poynter who sold it back to the Perry's in 1949.

Further Description of Important Features

A fire about 1950 destroyed the upper story to this building, and it was removed leaving it as a one story structure. Some changes have been made to the inner part of the building.

The area was formerly occupied by the Columbian Building built by a Mr. Punshon in the 1800's. A portion housed the Delphes Theatre, a motion picture house, and later a saloon. It was destroyed by fire in the late 1920's and was an abandoned vacant lot when purchased by Mr. McCormack in 1951. (See Appendix)

The small one story McCormack Building and lawn area was constructed in 1952 by S.C. McCormack, Jr. Floors are of asphalt tile and the walls are cement block that are painted.

The area was formerly occupied by the Columbian Building built by a Mr. Punshon in the 1800's. A portion housed the Delphes Theatre, a motion picture house, and later a saloon. It was destroyed by fire in the late 1920's and was an abandoned vacant lot when purchased by Mr. McCormack in 1951. (See Appendix)

On the south side of the building is a small park area with grass lawn, a flower garden and concrete sidewalk. The landscaping here was done by Mary Thomas when she and her husband occupied the larger apartment in 1968.

#43 Appendix
It was originally built in 1952 to house a barber shop facing State Street. Behind the shop, facing the lawn area, are two residential apartments, one a four room apartment at the front and a two room efficiency apartment in the rear. Both are of nearly fireproof construction of cement block, heated by forced air oil furnace.
