This brick two-story Tudor Revival house has a broken pitch mixed roof, with a prominent cross-gable, which contains decorative brick diapering, and brick soldier courses that divide the floors of the house. The entry gable has half-timbering in the upper portion, while the lower portion is of rusticated ashlar stone and the recessed entry is framed by a dressed stone round arch. Although they vary in size and shape, all first story windows feature diamond panes as do two second story accent windows on the main cross-gable.

This brick two-story Tudor Revival house has a high broken pitch slate roof, with a prominent cross-gable that contains the entry. The base of the entry gable is battered, and decorated with irregular rusticated decorative stone blocks. The gable also has a brown clapboard attic story. The group of four ground floor windows on the right consists of diamond-paned glass. The upper portion of the left side-wing is half-timbered.

This brick two-story Georgian Revival house has a three bay elevation, with chimney on one gable end and a mansard-roof portico supported by freestanding columns. There is a pair of stained-glass windows above the portico, while the double-hung windows are six-over-six configuration and are flanked by shutters. On the first story, the double hung windows are rectangular in shape and continue in a line to wrap around the elevation to the next side; there is a low hipped roof overhang above these windows.

This two-story Tudor Revival consisting of brick, stone, stucco, and half-timbering has a large salt box gable and two prominent cross-gables. A rustic stone foundation supports brick walls with irregular stone quoins. The high pitch central cross-gable contains an oriel, below which is a recessed arched stone entry. The first floor of the saltbox gable end has two arched windows and a small bay window. The right side of the house has a small arched porte-cochere.

This two-story Spanish Colonial Revival house with barrel tile low gable roof has a one-story cross-gable garage adjoining the right side. The right portion of the façade has two cross-gables. Toward the left of the façade irregular stonework surrounds the stone arched entry covered by a shed portico. The gable toward the center has a large bay window. The façade contains several groups of arched windows and full height windows protected by decorative iron balustrades.

This two-story Tudor Revival with a high gable roof has a large cross-gable with a nested cross-gabled oriel toward the right over the brick gothic arch entry. The large cross-gable has diamond brick patterns, and the oriel is of brown and white half-timbering. The second story of the façade is white stucco with irregular brickwork accenting the windows and corners. A slightly shorter gable wing with a half-timbered second story abuts the left of the house. A large brick chimney rises from this gable end.

This two-story brick house with medium gable roof has a large protruding cross-gable on the right with a smaller and set back cross-gable toward the center of the house. The gable ends project corbeled brick brackets beneath the eaves. The left portion of the façade has two full height arched windows on the first story. The small cross-gable contains the stone arched entry. Rowlock brick bands run between the stories.

This two-story brick and stone Tudor Revival house with medium gable roof has two prominent cross-gables that rise above both ends of a deep, rustic stone arcade spanning about three-fourths of the first story of the front façade. Battered buttresses jut diagonally from the outer edges of the cross-gables. Irregularly placed groups of windows mark the second story. Diamond pattern brickwork marks the attic portion of the left cross-gable.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with high hip slate roof with flared eaves has a large cross hip and hexagonal tower rising at the junction of the hips. A massive stone wall supports a corbelled wooden bracket and lintel that carries a shed roof over the recessed entry to the right of the tower. A large bay window atop a flared base of brick and irregularly placed stones sits at the end of the cross hip, which also has an inset gable dormer containing a long window with a prominent mullion. The dormer brickwork is patterned in the inverse of the gable. An oriel with leaded glass sits above heavily mullioned windows toward the right end. Irregular stone quoins mark the corners.

There is a contributing enclosed stone and wood out building behind the house.

This two-story brick Elizabethan Revival with medium pitch slate gable roof has a small cross-gable toward the left end, a large centered cross-gable, and a small gable dormer toward the right end. The attic portion of the large cross-gable has half-timbering and its corners meet the ground with battered buttresses, as do the other corners of the house. Irregular stonework accents the windows; irregular stone quoins rise from the foundation; a gothic arch springs from stone quoins that frame the recessed entry at the first floor of the large cross-gable.

This brick two-story Cotswold Revival house has a large cross-gable with a prominent chimney with irregular stone quoins and a small detailed blind arch at the second story filled in with herringbone brickwork and framed by irregular stone quoins. This main gable on the left and the smaller gabled dormer to its right have beige clapboard attic stories. Below the gabled dormer, there is a small stone enclosed porch with a brick archway that leads to the recessed entry. The opposite eave-front on the right has an inset shed dormer, and a group of four windows with a stone lintel and leaded panes. There is a contributing enclosed garage behind the house.

This two-story L-shaped Jacobean Revival house with medium pitch slate roof has diamond shaped brick decoration with checkered pattern inside beneath the prominent chimneys rising from each gable end. The house has no eaves. Large stone quoins mark the corners and the brick is of a handmade appearance. At the junction of the wings is a semi-hexagonal rusticated stone tower topped by a bell shaped roof, containing the entry at the first floor framed by heavy stone beams, curved corbels, and a heavy stone lintel. The other facets of the tower contain circular windows on the first story and rectangular windows on the second. To the left, in the long leg of the L, is a large shed bay with four diamond-paned windows, above which are two arched windows that break the roofline. The gable end of the short leg has a one-story shed portico resting on wood pillars sheltering a side entrance.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with medium slate gable roof has a cross-gable at the left end; the attic story has vertical black half-timbering with diagonally bonded thin red bricks. The two second story windows toward the right break the eaves with small gable dormers with curved black half-timbering with the same brick bond. A massive chimney rises from the left gable end. A protruding one-story brick portico toward the center contains a stone Tudor arch framing the recessed entry beneath a crenellated brick parapet. The unusual thin bricks are used in details throughout the façade. Three blank stone shields are embedded in the brick above the entry.

Description:
21. (cont.) History and significance. Expand box as necessary, or add continuation pages.

Three different building permits have been issued for this lot, in 1923, 1929, and 1933. The present house appears to be the last of these. The original owner of the 1923 house was Harry Krisman, architect E. J. Lawler and builder J. J. O'Brien. The original owner of the 1929 house was D. M. Broker, architect and builder O. D. Williamson. It was previously addressed as 7220 Moorlands then later 7210 Moorlands.

40. (cont.) Description of environment and outbuildings. Expand box as necessary, or add continuation pages.

41. (cont.) Further description of important architectural features. Expand box as necessary, or add continuation pages.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with low pitch slate gable roof has a cross-gable at the right end with a stone segmented arch framing the recessed entry and a second story of stucco and half-timber, and clapboard attic story. The main wing has three symmetrically placed second story windows and a large semi-hexagonal bay window on the first story.

41. (cont.) Further description of important architectural features. Expand box as necessary, or add continuation pages.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house has a medium pitch hipped roof that breaks at a two-story high notch into the right corner. The roof continues down to the first story to cover the entry adjacent to the two-story cross-gable projecting from the left end. The gable end contains black wood siding at attic story, a set of three windows on the second story, and a group of four prominently mullioned windows on the first. The right side of the gable end has black half-timbering with white stucco. The entry has two rectangular windows flanking the Tudor arch doorway in black and white half-timbering. Two inset hipped dormers, half-timbered, overlook the right from the second story. The notch has a wide entrance and a window looking out to the street with a heavy black timber lintel.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with medium pitch slate gable roof has a two-story cross-gable at the left end and a garrisoned cross-gable to its right over heavy wooden corbels above the stone segmented arch entry. The half-timber and stucco garrison has a window aligned with the entry. The cross-gable has a narrow attic story window below a group of four windows beneath a heavy stone lintel; on the first story there is a large curved bay window on a curved brick base. To the door's right is a narrow diamond-paned window. To the right a group of four windows under a heavy stone lintel, above which are double doors and a balcony. There are brick and heavy stone corbels supporting the ends of the eaves. Windows are leaded.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with medium pitch tile gable roof has a narrow high pitch cross-gable on the left end with half-timbered and checkered brick bond; a small semi-hexagonal bay window projects from the first story. A large buttress flares out in a slight curve from the left end. To the right are a crenellated parapet and a massive chimney projecting beyond the main mass near the center of the façade and defining the right end of the parapet. The right side of the façade contains irregularly placed windows and a French door. Stone accents the chimney and the windows.

This two-story brick Craftsman house with low pitch green tile dip roof has deep eaves. Along the front elevation is a large brick front porch spanning nearly the entire width of the symmetrical main mass. Its green tile hip roof rests on wide, low white stucco arches springing from limestone corbels and brick pillars. Limestone caps the low brick walls of the porch. The main mass has a centered gable dormer with an arched pair of windows; there are windows in each of the five bays of the second story, the first story has a pair of windows on each side of the door. A set-back two-story side wing projects from the right with leaded glass windows under wide segmented arches with stone springers and keystones. All windows have stone sills. There is a detached garage that is contributing behind the house.

This two and a half story Tudor Revival house with medium pitch slate gable roof has two large cross-gables on both ends of the house. The right cross-gable projects beyond the main mass and is brick up to the attic which is half-timber and white stucco. To the left of the right cross-gable, the low first story is brick and the second story half-timbering is garrisoned slightly over on wood corbels. Large brick chimneys rise from the sides of the house. The main gable ends are shingled. Windows are accented with heavy timbering. A shed dormer projects from the roof. A one and a half story two car garage with gable slate roof and large shed dormer projects from the back of the right side.

This brick two-story Tudor Revival with medium pitch slate gable roof has half-timbering and beige stucco on the second story of the main mass of the house. Toward the back of the left side a one and a half story gable wing protrudes with prominent chimney rising from the back and a large window beneath a cross-gable at the front. At the junction of this wing and the main mass a two-story rough stone round tower rises. It contains a deep gothic arched entry beneath a second story wrought iron balustrade on corbels. To the right of the tower a two-story cross-gable with decorative balustrade and large window protrudes. Further right is a small cross-gable above a window and a one-story high pitch gabled wing at the right gable end.

This two-story tan brick Italian Renaissance Revival with low hip red tile roof and slight eaves has a four bay main mass. It consists of three six-over-one windows on the second story directly above three round arch nearly full height windows with large stone sills and decorative iron balustrades. The far left bay contains a second story window about three-fourths of the height of the others with a decorative iron balustrade over a decorative stone arch and pediment framing the entry. The left end has a low gable one-story side wing with chimney on the gable end. A prominent chimney rises from the right end before a hipped side wing with Serlian windows and door that open onto an unsheltered porch. Brick quoins mark the corners.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival with medium pitch gable roof has an off-center cross-gable with half-timber and stucco second story with diamond-paned windows garrisoned over the brick round arched entry. A chimney rises from the right gable end. A small cross-gable breaks the roofline toward the left. The left of the façade has two large groups of windows. A semi-hexagonal bay window projects from the right.

There is a detached garage that is contributing behind the house.

This two-story square plan brick house with low hip roof has a one-story side wing on the left. The apertures have stone sills, lintels, and quoins surrounding them; on the right is the recessed entry. The windows on the second story are symmetrical: two six-over-one double hung windows are grouped together on the right and the left with a small casement window in-between; the casement has no quoins or lintel, just a stone sill. A chimney rises from the left end.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival has a large slate hip roof wing and a large steep cross-gable projecting from the left. Two smaller cross-gables punctuate the façade. An oriel projects from the second floor of the cross-gable, below it is a group of four full height windows surrounded by stone quoins and lintel. To the right in the smaller cross-gable is a pair of diamond-paned windows; beneath it is a wide recessed stone arched entry with two stone trimmed sidelights. A large semi-hexagonal bay window projects from the right beneath the third cross-gable.

There is a detached garage that is contributing behind the house.

This one and a half story brick Tudor Revival with high pitched cross-gable and medium pitched flared hip wing sheathed in slate. A heavy stone cross-gable containing the recessed arched entry projects from the right of the cross-gable; its side slant and large curved stone corbels form the eaves of the roof. The ends of the roofs end in flared peaks in pagoda fashion. There is a one-story side wing with gothic arched windows set with diamond-paned glass. Large shed dormers project from each side of the cross-gable. A battered buttress with large stones and large curved corbel defines the left end. The windows facing front have heavy wood lintels. Gingerbread brown clapboard siding accents the top of the gable.

This two-story white textured stucco house has multiple overlapping gables. A prominent tapered chimney rises from the center of the large street-facing gable; at the attic level this gable is beige clapboard. Two incongruously pitched shed projections jut from the left side. A one-story cross-gable projects from the left of the main gable and contains the arched recessed entry. The right side of the gable has a symmetrically placed entrance without an accompanying gable. The left side has another large shed projection farther from the street with an arched port-cochere projecting further from the house. There is a detached garage that is non-contributing behind the house.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival with medium pitch slate hip roof has a large cross-gable on the right end and a protruding cross-gable at the center. The brick is of a lighter color than the other homes; more pink, beige, orange in tone. The corners have irregular quoins. The second story of the central cross-gable is garrisoned and has half-timbering inlaid with brick in checkerboard and herringbone patterns. The Tudor-arched entry is framed in stone; the diamond-paned sidelight is as well. The left flares out in a stone battered buttress. The large gable on the right has diamond patterned brick on the gable end. A chimney rises from the left side.

This two-story brick home has a medium pitch shingle gable roof with two cross-gables: one at the left and one toward the right end. A slender chimney rises from the right end. Beneath the right cross-gable a prominent semi-hexagonal bay window with stone base projects. To its left the wide stone Tudor-arched entry contains the recessed entry of stained wood; above it a group of three slight windows with subtle brick corbels beneath. The left gable contains an attic window, a group of three narrow full height windows with decorative balcony, beneath which is a group of three windows.

| This two-story brick Tudor Revival with red tile low pitch hipped roof has a tall, prominent cross-gable at its center. Red clapboard siding accents the upper gable end; the two stories each contain a group of three windows accented by red mullions. A large chimney rises to the right of the gable. The eaves line descends down to contain the recessed entry with red wood lintel. A red clapboard steep shed porte-cochere resting on wood beams projects from the right end. |

This two-story brick Tudor Revival with medium pitch slate gable roof has three cross-gables in descending height from left to right. The left cross-gable has a brown clapboard attic story. A heavy wood lintel caps a group of four windows on its first level. The central cross-gable has a slightly garrisoned half-timbered upper story inlaid with herringbone and checkerboard patterned brickwork. Beneath is the heavy stone framed and arched entry. To the right a smaller gable decorated with diamond pattern brickwork breaks the eaves; it contains a semi-hexagonal bay window with lead paned glass. The house rests on a stone base. There is a chimney rising from the left gable end.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival with steep orange tile gable roof has a prominent cross-gable at the left. The gable ends are stucco and half-timber. The cross-gable contains the entrance at its right. A small cross-gable within the roofline of the larger shelters it. A prominent chimney rises from right, passing through the eaves. The right side ends in a one-story gable.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival with slate mixed hipped roof has a centered cross-gable with diamond brick patterning at the top; it contains a window with heavy wood lintel and below the entrance framed by stone quoins and sheltered by a copper overhang. A bay window projects from the right. Irregular stone quoins mark the corners and heavy wood lintels brace the windows. From the back right projects a two story wing with stucco and half-timbering on the second story; a blind arch faces the street and a side door faces the driveway.

There is a detached garage that is contributing behind the house.

This two-story textured stucco Spanish Colonial Revival house with low pitch barrel tile hip roof has a large cross-gable projecting forward at the right end. Rounded corners characterize the aperture edges and some have brick or red baked clay sills. The gable contains a large deep-set round arched window above a group of four narrow full height windows with a narrow decorative balustrade. An arched portico projects from right end, as does a two-car garage further to the rear. Above the dark wood door to the left of the gable spring two arches from spiral columns sheltering two windows. A wide round arch window on the first floor has three narrow glass block windows above it. A circular two-story tower beset with glass block windows projects from the left corner.

This two-story brick house with high pitch hip roof has a prominent off-center cross-gable. The hip to its right is lower than that to its left. The eaves are slight, but shading. A second floor balcony enclosed by thick brick walls punctuated by ornate white iron balustrades wraps around the right side of the house; it sits over a garage entered on the right side. A semi-hexagonal white oriel atop brackets projects from the second floor of the cross-gable. A decorative balcony to a second story window shelters the entrance. Shutters decorate the windows. A large chimney rises from the left end.

Site Map/plan (include north arrow):
This two-story white stucco restrained Arte Moderne house has low hip roofs over low slung forms. The second story is deeply set back and has only a small group of four windows at its center. A chimney rises from its left end. A deeply recessed rectangular entry flanked by two small round windows shelters the double front door. The cross hip two-story wing at the right contains a street-facing garage. The apertures in the house are few and mostly small.

This two-story brick house with medium pitch barrel tile gable roof with slight eaves has a small cross-gable at the right containing the entrance beneath a blind arch. A large chimney rises from the front between two French doors framed by blind arches through the eaves. Stone scrolls decorate the chimney as it narrows between the stories. A flat roof two-story side wing with many windows has a group of three wide full height windows beneath a blind arch on its first floor.

This two-story L-shaped brick Tudor Revival house with high pitch slate roof has a prominent hexagonal tower at the crux. The shorter wing to its left, with gable end toward the street, has a lower roof, a prominent chimney and a high-pitched shed wing with stucco and teal half-timbering attached at its end. The second floor of the tower has French doors with decorative balcony. A stone balustrade forms a courtyard with a fountain at this juncture, through which, to the right of the tower, in the higher gable wing, is the exceptionally heavy stone round arch sheltering the exceptionally deeply recessed entry. The heavy stonework continues above with stone corbels supporting the deep-set frame around a window. A one-story wing with tall high pitch gable roof projects from the right gable end. It contains a wide bay window of diamond-paned glass. A large chimney rises from its end.

This long two-story brick Tudor Revival house with medium pitch slate hip roof has a cross-gable toward the right with clapboard attic portion. It contains a tall stairwell window. A massive chimney flanked by windows rises from the front left of the gable. A porch of three brick Tudor arches shelters the recessed entry and supports the second story above where the cant of the roof steepens to conclude the main mass of the house. A large attached garage projects from the right end.

This two-story brick Tudor Revival house with high pitch hip roof has three cross-gables descending in height and prominence from left to right. A one and a half story wing projects from the left end. A long shed dormer faces front and the roof ends in a jerkin-head. The large, tall cross-gable to its right has a heavily half-timbered upper portion inset with brick with a narrow attic window, second story diamond paneled windows, and a large semi-hexagonal diamond-paneled bay window. On its left, following the cant of the gable a half-timbered and brick shed wing contains the double wood and glass doors. To the right of the large gable a gable of white stucco and half-timbering contains in its stone first story the recessed entry. A low stone wall forms a porch. Further right a massive stone chimney rises from the front. The third narrow cross-gable contains a half-timbered second story. A one-story gable projects from the right end. All half-timbering is black.

Other:
This two-story Tudor Revival House with medium pitch hip roof has a large cross-gable at the left and a smaller cross-gable to its right. The first story is brick and the second story is stucco and half-timbering. A hip dormer projects from the side of the cross-gable. The windows have half-timbering around them or have heavy wood lintels. The smaller gable has a slightly garrisoned second story above the wide segmental arch framing the deeply recessed entry. A prominent chimney with stone and stucco portions rises beside this gable. It contains a narrow window. A hip dormer looks out to its right. A semi-hexagonal bay window projects from the right; its street face is blind. A steep shed porte-cochere supported on heavy wood beams projects from the right end.
